Many Obama-era National Labor Relations Board decisions are expected to be rolled back with Donald Trump in the White House, but congressional Republicans may look to go even further and “punish” the board through dramatic budget cuts that would wreak havoc on the agency.

In the article “GOP Rage At Obama's Labor Board Could Cost Trump's NLRB,” featured in Law360, Steve Bernstein comments, “It wouldn't be our first rodeo with budget cuts of that magnitude, or at least approaching that.”

“If you start by judging from what they've done in the past, the most likely outcome would be some furlough program for regional staff.”
