

Columbia Partner Discusses How Returning to the Office May Reignite Harassment Claims

News

10.19.21

In an interview with HR Dive, George Reeves weighs-in on how employers should approach potential harassment and ADA claims as employees return to the office. George says that accommodation requests are likely one of the first hurdles, and he advises that employers remain consistent with their case-by-case decisions. More complicated, George says, will be how HR departments investigate discrimination claims. “Doing investigations logistically may be harder because you can’t just go visit someone in their office,” George says. “For those doing the investigation, you lose the ability to get a read on someone’s demeanor, which goes a long way in these investigations.” Additionally, George advises that employers should be mindful that discrimination claims may have been festering before the pandemic. “I think there’s some legitimacy to the idea that it’s something the individual tolerated or maybe didn’t realize prior to the solace of work from home, but now they know it’s there.”

To read the article visit HR Dive.

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

George A. Reeves, III

Partner

802 255 0000

000.200.0000

Email

Service Focus

Employment Discrimination and Harassment

Trending

COVID-19/Vaccine Resource Center

Related Offices

Columbia