

Boston Partner Discusses Biden NLRB's Review of Boeing Work Rule Test

News
1.07.22

In a Law360 article detailing the recent move by the National Labor and Relations Board (NLRB) to review a Trump-era decision that makes it easier for employers to defend handbook policies against claims they stifle worker rights, Joshua Nadreau said that he expects them to return to the Lutheran Heritage Standard — a “standard so broad that it almost moots the analysis,” he said.

“Coming from that sort of focus, it’s really hard to write a rule where there’s no conceivable way to interpret it in a way that wouldn’t chill an employee’s Section 7 rights,” he added.

The 2017 decision up for review overturned a 2004 ruling that said policies violate the National Labor Relations Act when they could be “reasonably construed” as restricting union organizing and other activity protected by the law.

Read the full article in Law360 (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Joshua D. Nadreau
Regional Managing Partner and Vice Chair, Labor Relations Group
617.722.0044

Email

Service Focus

Labor Relations

Related Offices

Boston