Bob Robenalt joined host Tom Wheelwright on The WeathAbility Show, a podcast dedicated to teaching people “revolutionary wealth and tax strategies.” The two discussed how the Omicron variant has shifted federal guidance away from science and onto the economy, and what businesses can do to keep the doors open after recent, massive disruptions.

According to Bob, new variants mean new rules in the workplace for owners, employees, and clients.

“There are several steps that employers can take to deal with Omicron,” said Bob. “For instance, the CDC recently changed their recommendations from ten days of isolation to five days, which has helped significantly,” he said. “With a recent client, we worked out a system where they can time their mandated testing to be in the middle of the week, where the weekend can be used as part of their isolation protocols.”

He also discussed how Omicron has changed the rules of work, tips for how business owners can further safeguard their workplaces, how to deal with mask mandates at work, how employers can prepare for long-term COVID-19 protection, and more.
