

Fisher Phillips Attorneys Offer Optimism for Regularly Scheduled Opening Day Amid Current Major League Baseball Lockout

News

1.21.22

Todd Lyon, co-chair of Fisher Phillips' Labor Relations practice, and Alex Desrosiers were both quoted in a Detroit News article that explored the current Major League Baseball lockout and whether labor negotiations will be ironed out by opening day. They offered some relief to fans who have already begun to miss regularly scheduled pre-season events and spring training.

"History is on the side of everything not happening on time in terms of Opening Day, including a condensed spring training, the closer we get to those (MLB) deadlines," said Alex. "But the more likely scenario is that both sides are going to be giving up some ground. There's nothing different here than would be found in any courthouse litigation."

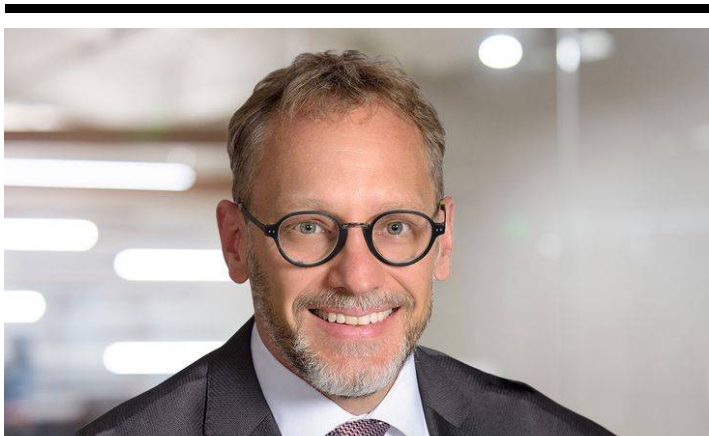

Todd agreed with Alex, stating that it was "unlikely" that the owners and the players association would sign a new CBA before the season is gouged.

"From a fan's perspective," Todd said, any delay to baseball in 2022 "is mutual destruction for both sides."

Read the full article in The Detroit News (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Todd A. Lyon
Partner
503.205.8095
Email

Alex G. Desrosiers
Associate
407.541.0857
Email

Service Focus

Labor Relations

Industry Focus

Sports

Related Offices

Orlando

Seattle

Portland

San Francisco

Los Angeles