In an article on how employers are addressing mental health in the workplace, Fortune highlighted Fisher Phillip’s Flash Survey results that show that nearly 60% of companies say they are openly discussing mental health and well-being in the workplace. Additionally, Raeann Burgo is quoted about the importance of removing the stigma surrounding mental health issues. “Removing the stigma associated with mental issues can work wonders,” says Raeann. She also adds that employers can consider reasonable accommodations as inexpensive fixes that help get workers on the right track and lead them to be more productive.
