

Privacy and Cyber Attorney Interviews on Stored Communications Act and Tips for Protecting Trade Secrets

News

2.22.23

In an interview with HR Dive, Darcey Groden discusses how employers can ensure data privacy and protect trade secrets without violating the Stored Communications Act (SCA). To protect trade secrets and company data, Darcey explains that employers can provide work phones and computers or a virtual private network. "In no case should employees be permitted to save work documents or information to their personal devices, and they should not use personal email." She also notes that employers should make it clear to employees what information is considered confidential or a trade secret.
