Join Fisher Phillips for a webinar designed to prepare employers for the next wave of disruptive activity in employment relations, led by the Federal government and labor unions across the country.

Workplace safety has become a major reason for employee interest in third-party representation. Employers should soon anticipate an uptick in OSHA inspections, including increased participation by 3rd parties, and safety related work stoppages and walkouts. This creates uncertainty in employers' independent efforts to maintain positive workforce relations and safe workplace environments. Now is the time to get in front of these looming developments and to adopt an assertive posture concerning the future of your workforce.

Attendees will come away from the webinar prepared to confront this latest source of workplace uncertainty, including in connection with OSHA inspections, retaliation claims, safety-based refusals to work and more. Important documents designed for practical application will be provided to all attendees.
