

Manufacturing Success, Episode #11: Transitions at the National Labor Relations Board

Videos

3.06.25

Change is in the air at the NLRB. Certain of the particulars have yet to be revealed, but the Trump Administration is moving quickly to make its own mark on NLRB policy and enforcement priorities, while at the same time rescinding those of the Biden Board. As any observer will confirm, this amounts to “business as usual” during times of political transition in Washington, DC. But the uncertainty can sow seeds of doubt in how manufacturers approach labor relations. In this episode of Manufacturing Success, Mike Carrouth is joined by Brian Balonick, Regional Managing Partner in the Pittsburgh office of Fisher Phillips. Their discussion aims to dispel doubt, while offering manufacturers a quick review of what has already happened, what can reasonably be expected to happen soon, and what it all means for businesses moving forward.
